King cables Soviet day

JEDDAH, Nov. 7 - King Khaled Wednesday sent a cable of congratulations to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev on the Soviet Union's national day.

The Saudi Press Agency said the King wished President Brezhnev and the Soviet people further progress and success. Saudi Arabia does not have relations with the Soviet Union. Leaders of the two countries however exchange greetings on national days.

Defense Minister Prince Sultan said recently that Saudi Arabia had no intention of establishing diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union.

The minister was speaking to journalists in Paris two months ago during a short visit to the French capital.

The Soviet Union was the first state to set up an embassy in Jeddah after King Abdul Aziz established the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Gold surges 11.25 dollars

LONDON, Nov. 7 (AP) — Gold (1974) 11.25 an ounce in London and $ 10.50 in Zurich Wednesday as the situation in Iran drove investors back to the metal, traditional refuge in times of uncertainty.

The threat by Iran to cut off oil supplies to the United States sent the dollar sinking against major currencies except the Japanese yen. Japan imports 99 per cent of its oil, paid for in dollars.

"The Ayatollah has certainly been pushing us around," said a London gold dealer, referring to Iran's leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Gold closed at$ 395 an ounce in both London and Zurich, against $ 383.75 at the close in London Wednesday and $ 384.50 in Zurich.

In Tokyo the dollar closed at 240.15 yen compared with 237.05 yen the night before, its highest level since February 1972. At one point it hit 240.6 yen and the Bank of Japan sold an estimated $ 350 million to stem the yen's decline. Tokyo dealers said massive waves of buying orders from foreign banks in the wake of news about Iran sent the dollars spiraling up in the morning. Japanese firms setting import transactions were buying in the afternoon.

But Europe's reaction was just the opposite and the dollar sank there in response to the continued occupation of the U.S. embassy in Tehran.

Washington reports attributed to the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency said Iran's oil exports were closed off Tuesday by a shutdown of the country's only crude oil port at Kharg Island in the Gulf. But the National Iranian Oil Co. later denied the reports and British petroleum, said it knew nothing of a

Kuwait injects money into mart

KUWAIT, Nov. 7 (AP) — Kuwait's Finance Minister announced that the Central Bank has injected $ 1.40 billion into the local financial market in recent weeks to overcome bank liquidity difficulties.

Abdul Rahman Al-Atiqi blamed the problem on speculators who sent interest rates soaring over the past two months. "There is no liquidity problem for the ordinary citizen, the national businessman or the local contractor," Atiqi added in a television interview Tuesday night.

The government had no plans to raise the current official interest rate of eight per cent he said. Such a step "will harm national economic institutions and private businessmen who will be unable to-borrow at higher rates," he added.

Local economists attribute the banks' liquidity shortage to the mass exodus of funds seeking higher interest rates, than the official eight per cent, abroad.

Arabs lodge protest

PARIS, Nov. 7 (SPA) — Arab ambassadors here Wednesday lodged a protest with the Foreign Ministry at an anti-Palestinian remark by Israeli Ambassador Meir Rozin on French television Saturday.

Yusuf ibn Abbas the Moroccan ambassador and dozen of the Arab diplomatic corps handed a note of protest to the foreign ministry. He sent a similar protest to the television.

Khomeini spurns U.S. plea

Brezhnev on PLO to help Americans in freeing Iran captives

TEHRAN, Nov. 7 (Agencies) — Ayatol-lah Khomeini Wednesday night ordered Iran's ruling Revolutionary Council and all state officials not to meet with a U.S. peace mission on its way here to negotiate the release of 60 Americans being held at the U.S. Embassy.

But Khomeini made no comment on whether he would meet with a delegation from the Palestine Liberation Organization reportedly also on its way here to negotiate for the release of the hostages.

Sources in Washington told Arab News Wednesday that President Jimmy Carter's administration had secretly asked the PLO to use its influence with Khomeini in an effort to win release of the hostages.

The administration's unofficial contacts with the PLO were suggested by Saudi Arabia, the sources told Arab News, and they said the PLO delegation headed by Abu Jihad left Wednesday for Tehran.

They said the PLO delegation was likely to have an easier time in securing the release of the hostages than the official U.S. mission, since PLO leader Yasser Arafat has forged a close relationship with Khomeini and his aides in the wake of the revolution against the

In a statement read on Tehran radio, Khomeini said, "Neither I nor the Revolutionary Council must meet any of them," (the U.S. group) until and unless the ailing former Shah is returned from the U.S. to Iran to stand trial.

The students who have been occupying the embassy since Sunday have demanded the immediate extradition of the Shah and a cut in all relations between Iran and the U.S.

The U.S. peace delegation, headed by former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, was sent to Iran late Tuesday by President Carter and was to air /e late Wedderway night in an effort to secure the release of the hostages.

The students holding the Americans have threatened to execute the hostages if the U.S. makes any military moves to free them or attempts to use political pressure to secure their release.

In his statement on talks with the Clark delegation, Khomeini said, "if the United States gives the Shah back to Iran and stops espionage against the revolution the way to negotiations will be open in some cases."

There was no indication what he meant by "in some cases," unless that was a reference to the PLO's mission to secure the hostages

"According to what we have heard, Carter's special envoy intends to come to Qom and negotiate with us, but we say that America has opposed returning the Shah and it has been said that the embassy was an espionage place against us. Thus my meeting with the envoy is by no means possible.

The Clark delegation is carrying a letter from Carter to Khomeini in which the U.S. leader asks for talks on the hostages and a general review of American-Iranian rela-

The Iranian Foreign Ministry had said prior to Khomeini's statement that members of the Revolutionary Council would meet with Clark and Deputy William Miller of the Senate Intelligence Committee, but Khomeini's statement undercut that claim.

The Revolutionary Council has been in overall charge of government affairs since Khomeini accepted the resignations of Prime Minister Medhi Bazargan and his provisional government Tuesday.

Bazargan, who had headed the government since the February revolution, was quoted by aides as saying he resigned because of his government's inability to deal with the hostage situation and because of continual opposition to government policies on the part of the Revolutionary Council

In New York, a spokesman for the PLO's observer delegation at the United Nations refused to confirm or deny that the U.S. had asked the organization for help.

"Our only concern is for the human lives involved," the spokesman said. There was no indication when the Palestinian delegation would arrive in Tehran, and the PLO office there said it had no knowledge that any delegation was in fact on its way. But the sources in Washington and the delegation office in New York insisted that the PLO is actively seeking to end the crisis, in what could be a significant breakthrough in Palestinian-American relations. According to the Washington sources, President Carter first asked Saudi Arabia to serve as a go-between with Khomeini, but the Kingdom advised Carter that the PLO would be the best choice to intervene with the Iranian leader. The Kingdom suggested that the U.S. approach the PLO on the subject directly, the sources said. The Kingdom's views were conveyed to Carter Tuesday by U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia John West. The sources added that the U.S. accepted the recommendation and that a U.S. official "unofficially" requested PLO help on the hostage situation, and got a quick promise of

Caretaker government expected

PARIS, Nov. 7 - Well informed Arab and Iranian sources expect a transitional government to be set up soon in Tehran. Its main task will be to oversee the completion of the country's new constitution as well as to run the referendum to approve it. Since most of the constitution - 136 articles — has already been approved by the Council of Experts, the 20 articles remaining are not expected to take more than two months to amend and approve. This will define the time scale of the transitional govemment's tenure. The main candidate for premiership is

Saudi Comment

By Hussein Ali Hussein Al-Medina

Saudi Television's programs during the Pilgrimage were admirable. New programs mainly concentrated on historical and social plays, all presented in Arabic, letting visitors get to know some of the good customs and traditions of our country. Besides historical and cultural programs, religious programs were also presented, which recalled one of the important phases of Islamic history, the emergence of the Prophet's message and the extent of the ecercion and tyranny to which Muslims were subjected by the infidels in those days.

Among the cultural programs, the television presented a series on poets and Arab writers during the golden age of Islam. The culture and age in which a particular poet lived was so well depicted that everyone was able to grasp them through the images. A number of other interesting programs were also shown to give the pilgrims an image of the all-round development in the country. The television also took the opportunity of repeating a number of good and interesting plays, the sort that give viewers with something new every time they are shown. They, included both literary and cultural series.

This sort of programming should be handled by the second channel. which is scheduled to begin broadcasting very soon. In this way, the channel can usefully transmit cultural programs giving an idea about cultural events in the world.

JEDDAH, Nov. 7-A surprise. inspection by senior municipal and health officials Tuesday led to the closure of 25 restaurants and cafes in the city center here.

Al -Bilad reported Wednesday that Dr. Hassan Hajrah, acting mayor of Jeddah, and Adel Abdul Karim Fadda, director of the municipality's Environmental Health Department, ordered the closures. Most of the establishments shut down were in Bab Mecca. Emareyyah, Hendaweyah and Bah Sharif

They will remain closed for two days to one week, either because they did not fulfil heath requirements for cleanliness or because of the doubtful nature of their food and drink.

Some of the restaurants and cases were found to offer nondrinking water, and staff did not carry health certificates.

Jeddah hospital to move to new buildings shortly

JEDDAH, Nov. 7 — The Eye Hospital here will move to its new buildings shortly.

Local reports have quoted the hospital's director, Sami Yaghmour, as saying that one of the new three storey buildings will house administrative offices, outpatients clinics and pharmacies. The second will sleep patients and the third will be used for storing goods and a nurses' residence. Each out-patients' clinic will have two doctors on duty.

It has meanwhile been reported that the Ministry of Health has decided to open eight clinics in the region of Hasa. They will be built in Taraf, Jasha, Battaliyah, Kallabiyah, Hay Al-Iyun, Mutihi, Shaqif and Salwa at the border station with Qatar.

It has also been reported that there are now 92 school health units in the Kingdom. Twentyfour are main centers. They employ 615 doctors, pharmacists and nurses. Each region has at least one center and several branch

Zia calls for raising

ISLAMABAD, Nov. 7 (AP) -President Gen. Muhammad Zia Ul-Haq ordered all-out efforts Wednesday for a 10.47 million ton wheat crop this fiscal year, up from last year's officially estimated 9.74 million tons.

Unless wheat production is raised to a level which is higher than the rate of population growth, it will become difficult to materialize the objectives of a self-reliant economy," Zia told a meeting of economic ministers and government organizations dealing with agriculture.

The population growth rate now is more than 3 per cent a year. Pakistan had set a wheat target of 9.5 million tons for fiscal 1979, which ended June 30, but actual straining its balance of payments. Pakistan normally imports one million tons of wheat a year, mainly to maintain a buffer stock and to meet shortages. Part of the wheat imports are financed with U.S. credits.

The Autumn of Crises: Jordan (5)

Editor's note: In the last installment of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's memoirs, which Arab News is publishing twice a week, he described his determination to support King Hussein, to reward him for his moderation and for his pro-Western policy. Kissinger recommended to Nixon an increase in America's Mediterranean forces. This angered the president at first as he wanted no confrontation, and no military moves by Israel unless expressly approved by the White House. Events then moved quickly. King Hussein announ military government on Sept. 17 and then ordered his army into Amman. The war began Syrian tanks invaded Jordan on Sept. 20 and, after Jordan destroyed 30 of them, counterattacked with two armored brigades across a broad front. We find Kissinger, in this installment, determined to meet the challenge.

During the course of Sunday afternoon I recommended -- and the President approved from Camp David - returning the airborne brigade in Serial from a base embarkation point from a base embarkation point from a maneuver area to which we had permitted it to move on September 18 when the crisis seemed to be cooling. The long planned maneuver exercise extended the reaction time of the brigade to ten hours; at its home base its alert status would be reduced to four hours. One battalion was ordered to prepare for an airdrop. At 5 p.m. we requested our Embassy in Bonn to notify the German govemment of the movement of the airborne brigade. We explained that its heightened readiness was made necessary by the possibility of evacuating Americans from Jordan. The brigade was instructed to move rapidly and openly without any security precautions; we wanted Soviet intelligence to notice it quickly. The German government was likely to spread word of our moves to friendly European governments. Dean Brown was instructed to tell Hussein of our public statements and our note to the Soviets and not to close the door to possible United States intervention.

During the afternoon the scale of the new Syrian attack became clear. We had continued planning on the assumption of either an-American or an Israeli military reaction; all in the government were agreed that the two must not take place simultaneously. On September 17 I had conveyed to the WSAG the President's preference for resisting Iraqi or Syrian intervention primarily with United States forces. I had requested that each course be examined in the light of three criteria: who bad the better reason for action? who could sustain his actions better? who had the greatest capacity to prevent escalation? I had asked for the best case that could be made for American action and the best case for standing aside and deterring the Soviets while the Israelis moved. These papers were available to the President over the weekend. I cannot tell whether be read them. In order to make a final recommendation to the President I called a meeting of the WSAG for 7 p.m. Sunday evening, September 20. From then on until the NSC meeting next morning, the crisis for us in Washington took the form of almost uninterrupted meetings and telephone calls. The flavor can best be conveyed by tracing the events of the night hour by hour. From 7:10 to 7:50 p.m. the ation Room in the White House basement, largely to bring one another up to date on events of the past hours and to look again at contingency plans. The intelligence and military briefings indicated that it was nip and tuck. Much of the discussion was a typical bureaucratic trauma over the trivial. Two portable military field hospitals were to be sent in response to the King's request for assistance; the debate was whether we should send them as an American contribution or under some multilateral aegis. A quick review of the pros and cons of American military intervention strengthened our conviction that our forces were best employed in tions. To be effective unilaterally we would have to commit our entire strategic reserve; we would then be stretched to near the breaking point in two widely separated theaters and naked in the face of any new contingency. Our forces would have to go in without beavy equipment and with air support only from carriers. Our only overland supply route was across Israel, linking us with Israel when separation was the principal reason for an American action. If we got into difficulties, we would have to call on Israel for help. In short, if the situation in Jordan get out of control it could be remedied only by a massive blow against Syria, for which Israeli armed forces were best suited.

At 7:50 p.m. the President, having returned from Camp David, called me to his office. He and I had been in frequent touch during this Sunday afternoon. I had rehearsed my concerns about unilateral American military action on several occasions along the lines of the WSAG consensus; late in the day he had changed his view. Just before the WSAG meeting he had told me that if there were a military reaction it should not be by us. I quickly brought Nixon up to date. I suggested that he call the senior members of the WSAG up to his office to give them some sense of his thinking and the psychological boost that can come only from Presidential leadership, Even though his view now coincided with that of the WSAG, I urged that he not reveal his change of mind so that the WSAG could go through the options again, free from the desire to fulfill Presidential preferences. He could then be sure to get the best judgment : he could make his formal decision after the WSAG meeting was con-

Once the point of decision was reached, Nixon acted with a kind of joyless, desperate courage torn between his insights and understanding of the international reality and his fatalistic instinct that nothing he touched would ever be crowned with ultimate success. The biggest problem at that point was to keep the courage from turning into recklessness and the firmness into bravado. In these

هڪرامن لئي ل

From about 8:00 to 8:20 p.m., Nixon met with the WSAG principals - Alex Johnson, Tom Moorer, Dick Helms, David Packard, Joe Sisco. He gave them a pep talk expressing appreciation for their efforts. He said that their job was to save the King against outside intervention; he expected their judgment regardless of what they might previously have assumed to be his preferences. He stressed that I would be speaking

At 8:20 p.m. the suitably inspired WSAG members left the President's office and resumed their deliberations downstairs in the Situation Room. I stayed behind for ten minutes to go over the options with the President. We both agreed that the odds favored our prevailing if we remained firm without being truculent and if we played our cards well.

At about 8:20 p.m., too, Denis Greenhill telephoned again on the secure phone. Since I was in the Oval Office, Haig in the Situation Room took the call. Greenhill passed on a message that Hussein had given to the British Ambassador in the morning and repeated again two hours before the phone call: In view of the deteriorating situation the King was requesting immediate air strikes. At 8:35 p.m. I rejoined the WSAG meeting, which continued until about 9:15 p.m. The British message reinforced the predisposition in favor of standing aside for an Israeli move. We did not possess enough intelligence or target information to respond rapidly to the King's plea with American forces. At the same time, if the United States was to hold the ring against Soviet intervention we would have to accelerate our readiness; we would thereby also improve our capacity to conduct air operations should the Israelis prove more reluctant to act than we estimated. The WSAG approved the following recommendations to the President: * improving the alert status of the airborne brigade in Germany

* putting the 82nd Airborne Division on full alert (this would undoubtedly leak and thus force a rapid decision on both Moscow and Damascus):

* flying a reconnaissance plane from a carrier to Tel Aviv airport to pick up targeting information (this would undoubtedly be discovered by Soviet and Egyptian radar, and signal that American military action might be approacing). In other words, we would heighten the perception that American or Israeli intervention was threatening. In my view that seems " balanced " and " safe " in a crisis is often the most risky. Gradual escalation tempts the opponent to match every move; what is intended as a show of moderation may be interpreted as irresolution; reassurance may provide too predictable a checklist and hence an incentive for waiting, prolonging the conditions of inherent risk. A leader must choose carefully and thoughtfully the issues over which to face confrontation. He should do so for major objectives. Once he is committed, however, his obligation is to end the confrontation rapidly. For this he must convey implacability. He must be prepared to escalate rapidly and brutally to a point where the opponent can no longer afford to experi-

At about 9:27 p.m. I asked Sisco to join me conveying the WSAG's recommendations to the President; as the official who sat at the nexus of all the cable traffic it was crucial for Sisco to understand the nuances of White House thinking. It would also help keep Rogers informed, he had decided to stay near a phone at home to await developments. First we had to find the President because Nixon had decided to go bowling. With the aid of the Secret Service we finally tracked him to an obscure alley in the basement of the Executive Office Building, Nixon calmly listened to our report and approved the recommendations while incongruously holding a bowling ball in one hand. It was one of the few occasions that I saw Nixon without a coat and tie. He said that whatever was done must succeed; he was determined to stop the Syrian attack. He agreed

Ambassador, I told him I would call Rabin.

At about 10 p.m., I returned to my office in the White House and placed the call. It turned out that Rabin was attending a dinner in New York honoring Golda Meir. He had to be called from the dais and brought to a reasonably secure place, though throughout the conversation I could hear the distant babble of voices. Telling no longer in contact with each Rabin that Sisco was also on the line, I asked what information Israel had on Syrian moves. Rabin said Israel estimated some two hundred Syrian tanks to be in the area of Irbid. I told Rabin that we had been asked for assistance but had no intelligence. Could Israel fly some reconnaissance at daybreak (then only three hours away in the Middle East) and give us its judgment? Rabin, who was nobody's fool, asked whether we would look favorably on an Israeli air strike if the intelligence indicated significant Syrian advances. I replied that we would prefer to make this judgment after analyzing the results of the reconnais-that we needed urgently to establ- sance. We were in the process of ish contact with the Israeli discussing this when I was handed another urgent message from the King, this time directly to us. I told Rabin I would have to call him back shortly. Hussein's message had come by telephone to our Ambassador two hours earlier. It spoke of a serious deterioration following a new massive Syrian invasion (the attack by the two brigades at noontime). Jordanian forces were other: Irbid was occupied. The troops in the capital were disquieted. In the King's view air strikes were imperative to save his country; he might soon request ground troops as well. Reversing his previous procedure, Hussein asked us to inform Britain of his plight.

At 10:10 p.m., Sisco and I jointly phoned Rogers from my office and told the Secretary of the conversation with Rabin and the new desperate message from the King. We were inclined to recommend to the President, we said, that we endorse an Israeli air strike. Rogers agreed we had no

At 10:12 p.m., now familiar with the route, Sisco and I therefore went back to the bowling alley. (I never say the bowling alley again after that fateful night). We told the President of the King's request and the consensus of his own senior advisers. He accepted our recommendation and authorized us to approach Rabin, At 10:25 p.m. Sisco and found our way back to my office.

At 10:35 p.m. I placed another call to Rabin with Sisco on the line. Just as the connection was being completed, Nixon, his bowling completed, walked into my office, conservatively dressed as usual. I told Rabin of the information we had received from Jordan, without specifying the source After discussion with the President and the Secretary, I could inform him that if Israeli reconnaissance confirmed what he had told me, we would look favorably upon an Israeli air attack. We would make good the material losses, and we would do our utmost to prevent Soviet interference. Rabin carefully repeated what I had said to make sure that he understood; he would have to consult his Prime Minister.

TILTING AT WINDMILLS

Finally, and as a result of the showdown between his government and the Revolutionary Council over the continuing occupation of the American embassy in Tehran, Dr. Mehdi Bazargan and his cabinet resigned.

It was clear from the beginning that the occupation took place on Khomeini's instigation and that of his Council: and that the prime minister and his foreign minister were both opposed. They both tried to find a solution consonant with international law and diplomatic usage, but failed in the face of extremism.

That the real purpose of the occupation was the embarrassment, even the destruction, of the Bazargan government is attested to by the speed of Khomeini's acceptance of the resignation. This became clearer as the acceptance was immediately followed with instructions for writing a new constitution and the organization of a new referen-

The Bazargan government, as it was quickly realized had far from decisive influence in the country. The real ruler has always been Ayatollah Khomeini himself. But for all that, Bazargan's presence, ·his known moderation and open-mindedness, were all taken as guarantees that at least a thread of responsible government still ran through the fabric of Iranian politics.

With his departure the field is left clear for extremists who have yet to show signs of the expertise and patience required to put a country with such a magnitude of problems as Iran on an even keel. The world, given Iran's economic and strategic importance, cannot but

While it is fair to say that extremism and confusion are necessary adjuncts to a revolutionary upheaval such as Iran had wimessed, it is nevertheless to be regretted that it seeks to take such a long time for things to settle down in the country.

The danger is that the elements within the leadership and in the street who have up to now preferred to tilt at windmills rather than face the pressing demands of economic and political reconstruction might precipitate a real crisis with the Arab world. Threats to the Gulf are still being made, and the feud with Iraq seems to go

This would be a real pity, since the Arab world has no interest except in seeing a happy, prosperous and stable Iran.

STRAUSS' DEPARTURE

The resignation of Robert Strauss, Carter's special envoy to the Middle East, drove a substantial nail in the coffin of the Israeli-Egyptian talks over Palestinian autonomy. There is no doubt that his famous "nose for business" told him the time was ripe for such a move. The credibility of the talks is sinking fast. Only a fool would hold on to such plunging stock.

Envoy Strauss has a good cover for his departure. He goes to manage the finances of Carter's reelection campaign. Yet this did not stop him from voicing his disappointment at the protracted wrangling that has been the story of the talks so far, and at the fact that no additional Arab side to the conflict had been persuaded to join.

Two events had been important in making up the envoy's mind. The first was the shock of King Hussein's refusal to meet him in New York, when he came with an invitation from President Carter for talks with the King. The second was the failure of the London round of the talks, when Dr. Khalil of Egypt and Mr. Burg of Israel failed to agree on a way to break the deadlock in their negotiations.

Strauss, in any case, is not the first absconder from the moribund peace process' between Israel and Egypt. From the American side, Cyrus Vance had already chosen the better part of valor. On the Israeli side, Dayan has already left, while Ezer Weizman said yesterday that he had thought of resigning, and is only staying because he might be useful it moving things along slightly.

But it is the Egy tian side which exhibits the most impressive list of casualties and escapees. There was first Ismail Fahmi who resigned on the eve of Sadat's visit to Jerusalem. Soon the defection of the foreign minister was followed by that of his deputy Dr. Mahmoud Riad. Then came in succession the resignations of Dr. Ibrahim Kamil and Field Marshal Gamasi, and the disappearance from view of Dr. Osama Al Baz.

One would have thought that there was enough evidence here of the dead end at which the "peace process" finds itself. For aside from the solid wall of external opposition, the building itself is crumbling from within. But this is what the parties to it refuse to recognize." Until, that is, next May, when the time they themselves have set up for the negotiations runs out.

A surprising legacy of the British era

By Michael Adams

I am often surprised, when I visit countries of the Arab world by the generally friendly attitude of the Arabs I meet towards Britain and the British people. Making every allowance for Arab courtesy, which makes it difficult to say rude things to a guest (and which sometimes, it seems to me, puts too much of a brake on plain speaking), I still find it remarkable that Arab as a whole seem so well disposed towards the individual Englishman. And of course I am very pleased that it should be so.

The contacts between us in the past have been, after all, less than satisfactory. If I were a Palestinian with only the sketchiest knowledge of Britain's part in the history of Palestine in the 1920s and '30s, or an Egyptian with a memory long enough to go back to 1956 (to take only these two examples of Britain's involvement in the Arab world), I believe I should find it difficult not to let something of my feelings show when I met a stranger from Britain.

But most Arabs seem to find it much easier to remember a good turn than an injury - which is a most engaging characteristic. Just this morning, for instance, I had a telephone call from Paris. On the other end of the line was an Egyptian who wanted to find out from me the address of an elderly English woman, now a widow. The reason for his enquiry? The Englishwoman's husband, many years ago, used to live in Egypt, where he was once Professor of Law at Cairo University, and this particular Egyptian had been one of his pupils before going on to make a distinguished career for himself in the courts. He knew that his old professor had died and he just wanted to assure himself that all was well with his widow. Perhaps that would not be so remarkable but for the fact that the professor's contract at Cairo University had been terminated in 1951 (when Britain and Egypt were in dispute over the presence of a British garrison in the Suez Canal Zone) — and here was his one-time Egyptian student, now a man in his sixties, taking the trouble to telephone from Paris, nearly thirty years later, to make a friendly enquiry about the welfare of his widow. You don't meet that sort of kindness every

So there is much to be grateful for in the way the relationship between the Arabs and the British has stood the test of time, and of political differences, at least on the personal level. But that only emphasises the failure to establish an equally satisfactory and fruitful relationship on the political level. And here there is much less for us to be grateful about.

Not that relations between us at the moment are bad. They are not; outwardly our governments are polite to each other, trade between us is flourishing and, with only minor exceptions, we are on perfectly good working terms. But that is about as much as you can say about the relationship. Otherwise it is lacking in any genuine warmth and it is devoid of the kind of sympathy and understanding which a relationship needs, whether it is between individuals or between nations, if it is to be proofagainst the kind of sudden shock that is unpredict-

There are all sorts of reasons for this state of affairs, some of them old and familiar, others relatively new. There are the obvious cultural differences between us, which become less important as time goes on and we learn more about each other, but which still need time and effort before they can be bridged. There is the language difficulty, which the Arabs have done much more than the British to overcome. There are old prejudices, racial and religious, rooted in the conflicts of past centuries, and new ones which have more to do with material interests and with the suspicions and resentments which they can so easily breed. And there is the impatience of the Arab world (which seems to me very natural) over the failure of Britain and of the West in general to adopt a more robust stance over the Palestine question.

All these factors are interestingly examined by Dr. Sari Nasir, of the University of Jordan, in his useful book The Arabs and the English, of which I am glad to see that a new edition has just been published in London by Longman. Dr. Nasir's approach is a dispassionate one, which I am sure is right; there is no point in trying to apportion blame for the lack of proper understanding — what is important is to be clear about the reasons for it and to try to deal with them. And that is a task at which both sides need to work hard.

If we can transfer the warmth that characterises so many personal relationships between us to the more formal political relationship between Britain and the governments of the Arab world, the future will look much brighter for all of us. It is not something we shall achieve overnight, but it is a task worth a lot of effort. And the basis, I am confident, is there to build upon.

UNESCO control causes political flap

By John de St. Jorre NEW YORK, — UNESCO's director-general, Ahmadou-Mahta M bow, a Senegalese educator, politician and diplomat, is under attack as he moves the organization closer to the Third World.

In terms of the issues it is tackling and the people it is appointing, UNESCO is being 'decolonized,' says one official.

The process is not as crude and unfair as some critics allege. Professional appointments are regulated by a national quota system and the latest figures show several Western countries, including Britain, France and Italy, are over-represented, while many developing countries are under-criticized as having an unfair share of the top posts, are in fact comfortably within their quotas.

The 'decolonization' move is resented by a number of Europeans and Americans within UNESCO, who have tended to regard it as a Western preserve, and an elitist preserve to boot. 'You hear them muttering in the corridors about negresco,' said an official who welcomes the new order. Both racism and nationalism are alive and well over there in Paris.'

Two groups seem to have maintained strong positions within the hierarchy: the French and the Yugoslavs, With UNESCO headquarters in Paris, it is not surprising that the French are well represented at all levels, but some American critics

STOCKHOLM -Pressure is building up here for international action to stop Britain and West Germany polluting Sweden's lakes.

Experts estimate that some 20,000 fishing lakes run the risk of being destroyed by airborne pollution. Most of this is carried across the North Sea from England but a substantial amount comes from West Germany and Poland.

The pollution, falling in rain over Scandinavia, causes 'acidification.' The immediate effect is that fish die. Lars Eliasson, president of the Swedish Anglers Association, says: 'Little is known of the long-term effects on human beings, animals, forests and farmland." Environmental activists are urging the government to take legal action against the countries causing the pollution, but the government is reluctant to do so because of the difficulty of proving responsi-

Sulphur pollution is the main problem. It could be neutralized by spreading lime on affected lakes but scientists are not sure about the long-term effects of such treatment. The cost would also be prohibitive.

Nordic Anglers' Union, representing sport fishing organizations in Norway, Iceland, Finland, Denmark and Sweden, has already appealed to Britain and West Germany to cut pollution. Lars Overrein, director of a Norwegian research investigation into 'poison rain,' says: 'Acid precipitation is one of the most serious global pollution problems. It is virtually impossible to foresee all the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research is organizing an international conference on 'the ecological impact of acid precipitation.' This will be held in Sandefjord, Norway, from 11 to 14 March next year. Meanwhile, the Swedish Anglers Association has enlisted the help of everyone from foreign journalists to the nation's No. 1 botanist, Carl von Linne (Linnaeus), who during his lifetime from 1719 to 1772 encountered sulphur pollution in the area around the Falun copper mine. Journalists invited from abroad to a conference

A most unusual night

Soweto shakes its head in disbelief

By Alvin Shoster

JOHANNESBURG — Blacks and whites agreed that it was a light. Some shook their heads in disbelief.

It was a dinner party. A senior government minister, his wife and two American visitors drove out of Johannesburg into the black township of Soweto, to the home of a black businessman for an evening of chicken, beef, fresh thut, ice cream and South African

P. W. Botha

The minister, Piet Koornhof, tho is in charge of race relations or the South African government, took no security men and rove his own car. It was as if he tere out for an evening with riends in the lovely Brooklyn area f Pretoria where he lives.

Some thought it was more like

Some thought it was more like len. William Westmoreland driving through the DMZ.

No one here can recall if a govroment minister of Koornhof's mk has ever made such a quiet ourney to Soweto for what mounted to a social evening during which wives talked about chilren and politics, and the men alked about sports and politics. he politics were fascinating.

Apart from the four whites, all the guests were black. They included David Thebehali, chairman of Soweto's Community Council and Percy Qoboza, the journalist jailed two years ago as an outspoken critic of the Pretoria government.

Koomhof, the minister of cooperation and development, had long wanted to come to Soweto for such an evening as part of an effort to keep lines open which the black community, a change in itself.

The conversation was mostly serious, dealing with the intentions of the government, the hopes of the blacks and even whether Ted Kennedy has a chance against Jimmy Carter.

The dialogue also had its moments of humor. When Koornhof got up to leave at about 11 p.m., Qoboza asked whether he had a permit. When one black suggested that they would be happy to take men like Koomhof along with them when they assumed power, the minister smiled and said. "I thought we were taking you along with us."

In any event, there was general agreement that things are changing in South Africa. A few days before the dinner, Prime Minister P.W. Botha had appeared before hard-liners in his National Party to say that there are more important things in life than to stare the whole day at the color of another man's skin.

"We are always prepared to allow black people into our kitchens to prepare our food and to bring us coffee in restaurants. But the moment a black man appears next to us in the post office, we say go away! What kind of nonsense is that?"

Such words are fine, said the black guests that evening in the red-draped dining room of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Maponya, but they want to see action. For instance, what is the government going to do to improve living standards of urban blacks? They are not spending their days worrying about one-man, one-vote. What they want, the black guests said, is better housing, better jobs, a better life for their children. The blacks suggested that the government could demonstrate its sincerity by holding a conference with black leaders.

"We are working on all those things," said Koornhof, who recently declared that racial discrimination here is dying. "With greater growth in the economy, we will be able to do more in the way of jobs. We are aware of the problem. And we are planning more housing in Soweto as well."

"We want to be consulted, brought into the decisions," said Qoboza, "Even if whites do good things, it makes no impact here because the blacks had no say. It was merely something handed out to them. It offends their dignity. They want a role in the formulation of policy. They want to feel South African. They are South

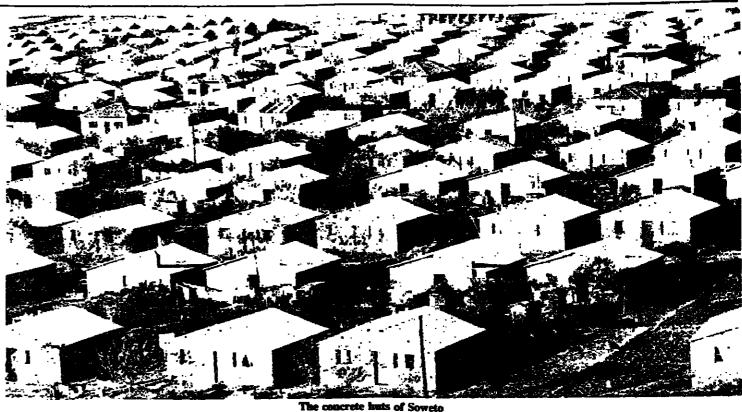

This kind of dialogue, in these circumstances, would have been unthinkable before Soweto exploded in 1976. The riots generated new thinking in the sovereign National Party, but it took the new administration of Botha, who came to office a year ago, to move into what appears to be an era of reform.

"Something is happening," said one of the dinner guests. "How much and how fast is the question. All is not lost yet for the blacks. If I thought we were without hope. I would have left this country long ago. As for tonight alone — extraordinary, just extraordinary."

Koomhof climbed behind the wheel of his car as disco music mingled with the smoke from the coal fires used for cooking in the tiny Soweto homes. There were handshakes and waves and general agreement to do it all again, soon.

"Next time, my place," Koornhof said. — (LAT)

WHY SHOULD SAUDI ARABIA DEMAND THE WORLD'S BEST VACUUM-CLEANER?

We don't mean that any one value is the most efficient all over the world. The streng is tworking life of a vacuum-cleaner depend very much on the geographic and climatic conditions where it is used. Saudi Arabia is a country where for certain periods of the year the air contains large quantities of small particles which increase the wear and tear on technical equipment. That is why Electrolux in Sweden have developed a vacuum-cleaner of the very finest quality, which can stand up to the specific conditions in Saudi Arabia — the D720. We dare to claim without any reservations that we make the world's best vacuum-cleaner. And for many reasons.

AUTOMATIC DUAL VOLTAGE

It's a bad enough problem to be faced with several different plugs and voltages every day, but when you move into a new house it's even worse as the electric voltage and plugs are often different from in your old home. Plug in your conventional vacuum-cleaner and it will blow up. The Electrolux D720 has been equipped with automatic dual voltage which means it will immediately adapt to either 110V or 220/240V current without any risk.

THE QUIET VACUUM-CLEANER

A conventional vacuum-cleaner is noisy, may interfere with radio and TV broadcasts, and can end up being a strain on the nerves. But thanks to its advanced engineering and a built-in device to eliminate noise and interference the D720 operates much more quietly and pleasantly despite having a powerful motor. Furthermore it has a modern design with rounded contours in order to avoid damaging furniture and to make it easier to move around.

MANY-SIDED HOUSEHOLD AID

No other vacuum-cleaner has so many advanced details. The D720 has an automatic nozzle, thermometer-type dust indicator, cord winder, concealed plug, conical fabric-covered hose, and a large self-sealed dust bag. Extra accessories include a motor-driven carpet nozzle and a carpet shampooing attachment.

WHO MAKES THE WORLD'S BEST VACUUM-CLEANER?

Electrolux. A super-modern Swedish company with subsidiaries and branches throughout the world. Electrolux has a worldwide reputation for its high quality household appliances, such as refrigerators, freezers, cookers, kitchen fans, washing machines, dishwashing machines and comprehensive line of kitchen fittings. The Electrolux cleaning products line is way ahead of the competition. Because so many modern professional office and commercial cleaning companies choose Electrolux the modern home uses Electrolux too. And Swedish quality is a further guarantee of a long working life. Which is why Electrolux is now the world's largest manufacturer of vacuum-cleaners.

Moscow-Peking talks still stuck on agenda

MOSCOW, Nov. 7 (AP) — The Soviet Union and China appear to have made little progress in more than a month of "normalization talks" in Moscow, with each country continuing virulent propaganda against the other.

Both sides claim they want the talks to succeed, but each says responsibility for the outcome rests on the other partner. Meanwhile, Soviet and Chinese officials Tuesday repeated their public snubs at anniversary celebrations of the Bolshevik revolution.

At a gala Moscow rally to mark the revolution's 62nd year Andrei Kirilenko of the Soviet Communist Party's ruling Politburo delivered the now-traditional withering attack on Chinese policies.

Following in the footsteps of Chinese diplomats since 1975, Chinese charge d'Affaires Tien Iseng-pei walked out of the Kremlin event as soon as the tone of Kirilenko's remark became broadsides would diminish. But both sides have swept up their verbal attacks, and Kirilenko assailed Tuesday the "true hegemonistic nature" of Chinese leaders.

A Chinese source this week said the full-scale talks have made "no progress at all" because of conflicting positions over the agenda.

The Soviet Union, the source said, is insisting on starting with a " declaration of principles" on Sino-Soviet relations. This would be a document that both sides could sign and publish as an initial show of good faith.

The Chinese delegation is pressing instead for an initial discus-sion of points of disagreement

Venezuela backs moderate hikes in crude oil prices

LONDON, Nov. 7 (AP) - A key oil minister in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries says OPEC members think future price increases must be "reasonable."

Venezuela's Minister of Energy and Mines, Humberto Calderon Berti, also said in an interview with the Associated Press Tuesday that OPEC countries were now turning their attention to keeping the world supplied with oil, not just price.

"In the future, in my opinion, the guarantee of supplies is going to be far more important than its price, because the world is almost going to run out of oil in the next 20 years," Calderon said.

He was speaking at the end of a two-day closed session of OPECs Long-range Strategical Policy Making Committee.

Venezuela hosts the next full OPEC meeting in Caracas Dec. 17 when a new round of price increases is expected.

"We agreed today to urge the development of new sources of energy, not to compete with oil and hydrocarbons, but to alleviate the pressures we have on our backs," Calderon said.

"We have also agreed to recommend the adoption of a

"Production and conservation however, are not OPEC decisions, they are left entirely to the discretion of the producer states because it involves the sovereignty over one's own resources."

He said Venezuela produces 2.35 million barrels a day but from Jan. I would reduce output to conserve resources by 150,000 barrels a day, mainly of light and medium oils.

World oil production is currently running at 31.5 million barrels per day and would within a decade be-increased to 35 million barrels, he said.

The Committee agreed that the world's oil supply and price problems only can be solved in dialogue with the industrialized

Reporting this consensus. Calderon looked forward to a package agreement with consuming countries. The package would guarantee supplies of industrialized nations provided that the developed world agreed to pay higher but "reasonable" prices for the oil, meals and commodities it imports from the Third World, he said. Before a dialogue is started. Calderon said, all spot market oil trading must stop and there must be a full understanding between developing countries on its aim. "The industrialized countries should suspend all free market operations," said Calderon.

At present the importing countries' inventories are exceptionally high and cover more than what will be needed this winter. There is no need to resort to buying from the free market."

"After all, the 10 to 15 dollars difference in price does not benefit the producers: it increases the cost of the oil and occasionally finds its way into the pockets of intermediaries and encourages speculation."

ashes the A-K of hearts ed returns the nine, West nood. You go up with the ace and need the rest of the ricks to make the contract. At this sort. Let's as chance that East was dealt the king of clubs. Using this as a ghidepost, your first obligation is to look for a ps 80, 78, or conceivably en 100 per cent. es evident that you can raise your prospects sub-stantially above 50 per cent by allowing for the possibility after winning West's diamond shift at trick four, you play a low trump to your king and lead the queen of hearts. As it happens, West has no more trumps and this allows you to discard a club from dummy.

The rest of the play is easy enough. You cash the ace of clubs, ruff a club in durany, bring home the contrac hummy and still have the club

'not prepared to sound retreat'

By Michael J. Hall

Welcome Back! Or, Rather, I suppose it should be the other way around, since it's this space that has been missing and not the readers of Arab News.

I fulfilled a great ambition over the Eid break. Not by camping out in the rugged mountains of the Asir, as did some friends and colleagues, nor by tangling with a shark along Jeddah's reef and living to swim away and talk about it.

No, my accomplishment was much more prosaic, but at the same time somewhat easier than either of the above occupations. I caught up on my sleep, spending an average of 10 to 12 hours a day sacked Pity I didn't wait for my annual leave in the States next month to do it, however. Had I waited, I could have earned $150 a week for the strenuous work of lying in bed and dreaming.

At least, that's what I'm told the Boston Museum of Sciences is paying a group of volunteers in a study of sleep and dreams.

The 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily sleep-in is being conducted in an effort to learn more about the mysteries of the one-third of our lives we spend asleep. The only problem is that volunteers, taking part in the study are awakened several times each night...er, ah, day, and asked to relate their latest dreams.

But to be paid just for sleeping, I might be willing to stand the interruptions, after all, it's not everyone who is lucky enough to have a job and a hobby that go hand in Speaking of sleep, an English doctor named Olden will soon have plenty of time to devote to the subject, according to a report reaching us from London.

Dr. Olden and his wife had just returned from South Africa to the United Kingdom, bringing along their pet cat, Baby. But they hadn't reckoned with England's strict quarantine laws, which require that animals be held for six months to make certain they are disease free before being allowed into the country.

Mrs. Olden reportedly couldn't stand the thought of her precious Baby spending so much time behind bars, so she persuaded her husband to do something about it.

His solution was to find a similar looking cat, and sneak it into the kennels where Baby was being kept, at the same time carrying Baby out to freedom.

But the plan backfired when the substitute cat gave birth to a litter of four kittens soon after she had been switched (Baby had been spayed and couldn't have kittens) and kennel workers were also perplexed at why the cat they thought was Baby suddenly began rejecting her favorite chicken dinner.

A little detective work followed, and the plot was smashed. After a five-day trial last week, Dr. Olden was ordered to pay 2,000 pounds in court costs, and sent off to quarantine (jail) himself for three

That should put the catnapping doctor back on the streets at about the same time Baby is released, a sadder — but undoubtedly wiser - man.

World - records, as you've probably noticed, are a subject I can't resist. Neither is the opportunity to browse through a well-stocked library or bookstore. So this item fits two of my fancies, and I hope tickles yours. More than 120 Japanese have been standing in a Tokyo bookstore for the past several days in an attempt to set or break the world's record for reading while standing up. I say set or break because I'm not certain whether anyone's ever considered such a feat before. A land development company which is sponsoring the event has promised to pay the winner $ 1,300, and - more importantly - a chance to get into the record books. Rules ban moving around the floor, leaning on anything, dropping the book below elbow level, leaning gum or listening to taped music to keep awake.

"Record-breaking games are sweeping this country like fads these days, but we just wanted to have one open to ordinary citizens," said a spokesman for the developers. What gets read isn't important, according to the rules. Comic books are just as good as James Joyce, and probably a darn sight easier to understand after 200 straight hours of watching words flow by.

BOSTON, Nov. 7 (AP) — Senator Edward M. Kennedy, decrying the "lack of a clear summons from the center of power" Wednesday formally announced that he is challenging President Jimmy Carter for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

Kennedy, the third of the famous Kennedy brothers to seek the nation's highest office, has been mentioned as a presidential candidate in every campaign since 1968, but Wednesday's announcement marked the first time he has formally entered the race.

The Massachusetts senator made the announcement in a speech at Boston's Faneuil Hall in front of a cheering crowd of supporters. The site of the announcement is famous as the site of much U.S. Revolutionary War political activity.

The 47-year-old Kennedy, setting out on a path taken by his two assassinated brothers, President John Kennedy and Senator Robert Kennedy, said, "I seek the presidency with no illusions."

After the announcement at 1500 GMT Wednesday, Kennedy set out on four day campaign swing, beginning in New Ham-shire, site of the nation's first presidential primary on Feb. 26.

On Thursday, California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr, was to enter the Democratic race. and Carter will officially announce his candidacy for re-election on Dec. 4.

In seeking to unseat Carter, Kennedy is emphasizing what he calls leadership for the 1980s to halt "a sense of a lack of direction" in the country.

"Fear spreads that our leaders have resigned themselves to retreat," he said.

"This country is not prepared to sound retreat," Kennedy said "it is ready to advance. It is willing to make a stand. And so

RIVALS: Sen. Edward Kennedy makes a point in a chat with President Jimmy Carter at last month's dedication of the John F. Kennedy Library in Boston. Wednesday, Kennedy formally announced his challenge to Carter for the 1980 Democratic nomination.

Members of the Kennedy family sat in the front row as he launched his first bid for the Kennedy's announcement was a sharp indictment of the domestic policies of the Carter administration.

While never mentioning President Carter by name, Kennedy's references to the Democratic incumbent whom he is challenging for their party's nomination was unmistakable.

"I question no man's intentions," he said. But I have a different view of the highest office in the land - a view of a forceful, effective presidency, in the thick of the action at the center of all the great concerns our people share.

"The failures are stark."

"-- Workers are forced to take a second job to make ends meet because wages are rising only half as fast as prices." Public opinion polls show Kennedy with a substantial lead over Carter among likely Democratic voters, although the most recent surveys indicate the gap is narrowing and

Brown is given little if any chance at the nomination unless Kennedy and Carter so wound each other during the early months of the campaign that neither appears able to command the confidence of the public.

most politicians expect the battle to be a

Among the issues expected to trouble Kennedy during the coming campaign are the 1969 drowning of a young woman in the senator's car and his separation from his wife.

In addition, Carter campaign organizers, convinced that the U.S. is in a cost-cutting mood, are expected to attack Kennedy as a big-spending liberal in the Senate.

But Kennedy's supporters say that Carter's three years as president have shown him incapable of rallying the American people to confront any of the problems facing them, from energy to the economy to those of foreign policy.

Kennedy's announcement here marks a major departure from tradition. Both John and Robert Kennedy announced their candidacies in the ornate Senate Caucus Room in Washington.

John won the presidency in November, 1960, and served for three years until he was gunned down by an assassin in Dallas, Texas, in November, 1963.

Robert Kennedy, a senator from New York, declared his candidacy for the presidency in early Spring, 1968, and was shot in a Los Angeles hotel in early June after winning the key California primary election.

Carter's campaign has been bouyed in recent weeks by victories over Kennedy in test votes in Iowa and Florida, but both nonbinding straw polls among Democratic workers occurred prior to Kennedy's formal entry

The church sources said the declaration will be much stronger than that by a Jesuitrun radio station shortly after Natusch ousted constitutional president Walter Guevara in a coup last Thursday.

Military and political sources said the army and peasants clashed at Achacachi, about 100 kilometers northwest of the capital.

Details of Tuesday's confrontation were sketchy, but one well-informed military source said airplanes straffed the peasents. Union sources said that miners in Bolivia's imports through Zimbabwe Rhodesia announced by the Salisbury government on Monday, the Zambian leader said Tuesday that his country had enough stocks to last through "this troubled period."

Speaking to the new Iraqi ambassador to Zambia, Fakhri Ahmed Qasin at State House, Kaunda described Zimbabwe Rhodesia's action as the "last kicks of a dying horse." "The measure they have taken to stop our maize from passing through their country is just one more of their methods to try and intimidate the Zambian people." he said. He called upon the international community to come to the aid of Zam-

Meanwhile, Zambia's minister of agriculture and water development, Alexander Chikwanda, said that in contrast to Rhodesia's plans trying to "boot us out. Zambia supplies its southern neighbor with double the electric power used by the entire country of Malawi and yet has not threatened cutting it off.

"If Bishop Muzorewa (Zimbabwe Rhodesian leader and the people in Salisbury have any sense at all, they should appreciate Zambia's integrity and appreciation for the problems of her neighbors," he said. Zambian railway officials were nuble to confirm whether maize shipments had, infact, stopped moving across the Victoria Falls railroad bridge, the main rail link between the two countries. On Monday, the Salisbury government announced that all imports of maize for Zambia through Zimbabwe Rhodesia would be cut off, until the Lusaka government stopped Zambiaaided guerrillas from invading Zimbabwe Rhodesia. The Zambian cabinet, led by President Kaunda, met Tuesday on the Zimbabwe Rhodesian action to blockade the vital food imports. Political analysts in Lusaka said there was "reasonable doubt" that the announced embargo would be carried out. They said the cutoff of maize supplies, this country's number one staple. could be construed by the Zambian government as "an act of total war."
